Measure G provides a locally controlled source of funding for vital services. Every dollar stays local. State politicians can't touch it.

Measure G includes strong taxpayer protections:

- Independent audits
- A citizens' oversight committee
- Public review and disclosure are required

We all will be able to see how funds are spent and hold local government accountable.

Taxpayer skepticism is reasonable. That is exactly why Measure G should be judged by what we stand to lose without it – and by whether the safeguards are strong enough to protect taxpayers.

REBUTTAL TO ARGUMENT IN FAVOR OF MEASURE G

The Yes argument insists Measure G merely "protects" existing fire, 911, water, road, and patrol services and that it is "not about expanding government." It also touts "strong taxpayer protections" and local control.

The actual measure tells a different story.

Measure G is a general tax.

- Revenue drops straight into the County's unrestricted general fund.
- The wish list of services on the ballot carries no legal force.
- Any future Board of Supervisors may spend the money on whatever priorities it prefers.
- The citizens' oversight committee is appointed by that same Board and can only recommend—not control—how dollars are used.
- Independent audits will report after spending has occurred; they create no forward looking fence.

Voters already rejected sales tax increases twice.

Asking a third time does not magically add binding restrictions.

This permanent 1% tax on purchases lands hardest on seniors living on fixed incomes and families who count every dollar.

Local households will pay the large majority of the projected $22.5 million each year - roughly $160 to $220 per person—on almost everything except groceries and prescriptions.

Calling the tax "locally controlled" does not change its unrestricted nature.

If the County needs dedicated funding for public safety and water, it can propose a special tax with enforceable limits.

Measure G contains none.

An open-ended general tax is different from protected services. It is a blank check that you don't get to fill in.

ARGUMENT AGAINST MEASURE G

Here we go again.

For the third time, elected officials are asking for a permanent 1% sales tax on almost everything you buy in Sutter County.

Voters already said NO—twice. Apparently "no" just means try again.

This is a general tax. The money goes straight into the general fund. The nice-sounding list on the ballot (drinking water, fire stations, roads, sheriff/police patrols, fire/medical response) is not a binding promise. Future Boards can spend it on anything they choose. The "citizens' oversight committee" is appointed by the same Board and can only make recommendations. Audits show where money already went—not where it cannot go.

Most of us live paycheck to paycheck. Seniors on fixed incomes—Social Security or pensions that barely keep up—and low-income families feel a sales tax the hardest. It hits clothes, car repairs, appliances, restaurant meals, shoes, books, toys, dog food—nearly everything except groceries and prescriptions.

Visitors will pay a little. Local families will still pay most of it: probably $160 to $220 or more per person each year. That's a lot of money when every dollar counts for rent, medicine, heating, or putting food on the table.

$22.5 million a year is a big number when it comes out of our pockets every single time we shop. This permanent new tax shifts the bill onto us.

If the County truly needs money for public safety, roads, or water, put a special tax on the ballot with real, enforceable restrictions. This one doesn't have them.

Fool me once, shame on you.
Fool me twice, shame on me.
Fool me three times? NO.

Keep your hard-earned money. Tell the County to live within its means the same way the rest of us do.
